1. What Wedding Stationery Do I Need?

Here's a list of stationery items you might want to consider:

Before the Wedding

Save the Dates – Invitations – RSVP Cards
Details/Enclosure Cards – Belly Bands – Envelope Liners

On the Day

Ceremony Booklets – Welcome Signs – Seating Charts
Table Numbers – Menu Cards – Place Cards

After the Wedding

Thank-You Cards

Tip: Not every wedding needs every piece—choose what fits your celebration and budget.

5. How Many Invitations Should I Order?

Don't order based on guest headcount—order based on households/couples.

Example: 150 guests = ~80–90 invitations

Always order 10–15 extra for keepsakes, calligraphy mistakes, and any last-minute additions.

6. Tips to Save Money Without Sacrificing Style

Use digital RSVP instead of printed

Choose a single insert card with a QR code linking to your wedding website

Simplify embellishments (e.g., printed monogram instead of wax seal)

7. Common Mistakes to Avoid

Ordering too late—rush fees can be expensive

Forgetting postage costs

Not triple-checking wording & guest names

2. When Should I Order?

Here's a suggested timeline to keep you stress-free:

Tip:

Allow extra time if you have custom illustrations, letterpress, or international guests.

3. What Should Be Included in My Invitation Suite?

A basic invitation suite usually includes:

Main invitation

RSVP card

Details card

(accommodations, website, dress code, etc.)

Optional extras:

Envelope liner

Wax seal

Ribbon or belly band to hold everything together

4. How to Word Your Invitations

There's no one "right" way to word an invitation, but here's a classic example:

Together with their families
Emma Rose Smith
and Liam James Bennett request the honour of your presence at their wedding celebration
Saturday, the twenty-fourth of May Two thousand twenty-five at half past three in the afternoon
Willowbrook Gardens
Reception to follow

Want something more casual,
or wording to fit divorced/remarried families?

We'd be happy to advise—just ask!
